Madison- State Representative Janel Brandtjen (R- Menomonee Falls) is indebted to three Wisconsin Congressmen for calling on the Center for Tech and Civic Life (CTCL), a registered 501(c)(3) non-profit, to reveal their financials. Facebook's Mark Zuckerberg wrote off $350 million to CTCL under the auspice of creating safe voting environments.

"With less than 1% of the CTCL money spent on PPE, I'd like to thank Congressmen Scott Fitzgerald, Glenn Grothman and Tom Tiffany for demanding CTCL immediately publish their full financial 990s for review. Congressmen Fitzgerald, Grothman and Tiffany realize how third-party money has damaged voter confidence in Wisconsin. CTCL grant dollars were a quid pro quo, inserting democrat operatives into election offices such as in Green Bay. CTCL then had the ability to claw back dollars if they were not satisfied with the municipalities' cooperation," said Representative Brandtjen.

The letter drafted by New York Representative Claudia Tenney recognizes that instead of spending money on COVID-19 precautions, CTCL spent money on advertising, designing ballots, registering felon voters, giving pay raises, and the purchase of automobiles - even an RV as a mobile voting site.
